DEAN’S MESSAGE

Impressive is not a word used in academia very often, but it does describe the SHTM’s achievements over its 40-year history, and we hope that this issue of Horizons will introduce you to more. We start with coverage of our Splendid 40 Years Gala Dinner in September, where we also honoured 2019 SHTM Lifetime Achievement Award recipient, legendary Indian hotelier Mr P. R. S. Oberoi.

We then turn to the budding young hospitality and tourism leaders of the future with highlights of the graduation ceremonies at the 25th PolyU Congregation (SHTM), and an interview with recent hotel management graduates now establishing careers at the Rosewood Hong Kong.

Following coverage of the 2nd One Belt One Road One Tourism International Conference in Guilin during October, for which the School was a co-host and at which an important declaration on the region’s tourism potential was promulgated, we look back at the 13th UNWTO/PATA Forum on Tourism Trends and Outlook, again in Guilin during October, which we co-organised.

Our attention then turns to programmes, with comments from the highly satisfied participants in our world-first online MicroMasters in International Hospitality Management programme and our ground-breaking on-campus postgraduate programmes.

Research then takes the spotlight in coverage of six recent studies conducted by our outstanding academics, after which we give details of Executive Development Programmes that have recently helped to advance the industry. We round off the issue with staff and student news and highlights of F&B activities, among other things.

With each issue of this magazine we show just how impressive the School has become, but there will always be more in the future. That’s what being impressive truly means.

Professor Kaye Chon
Dean and Chair Professor
Walter & Wendy Kwok Family Foundation Professor in International Hospitality Management
School of Hotel and Tourism Management
The Hong Kong Polytechnic University

Four decades ago, an institution was founded that would rise from humble beginnings to become a school unlike any other. On 20 September this year, nearly 400 guests from around the world gathered at Hotel ICON for a sumptuous gala dinner to mark the 40th anniversary of the SHTM. Aptly themed “Splendid 40 Years”, the occasion was made doubly meaningful by the presentation of the 2019 SHTM Lifetime Achievement Award, honouring another decades-long contribution to the industry.

“Our School has come a long way”, said Professor Philip Chan, PolyU Deputy President and Provost, who kicked off the event with a welcome address. In 1979, it was a small diploma-conferring department of PolyU. Within just 10 years, it had established Hong Kong’s first Bachelor of Arts programme in Hospitality Management. Another decade saw links forged with the mainland and across the region, and by 2004, the department had become an independent School of the university, with an international reputation. The rest is history. “With the establishment of Hotel ICON”, said Professor Chan, “the SHTM set a new standard for hospitality education”.

In his opening remarks, Professor Kaye Chon, SHTM Dean, Chair Professor and Walter & Wendy Kwok Family Foundation Professor in International Hospitality Management, offered a slightly different perspective on history. Forty years might seem like a long time”, he said, “but it isn’t”. Tremendous power comes through such synergies, explained Dean Chon. “The school has a strong spirit and culture of working hard with the same common goal: to make a difference in our field.”
The Best is Yet to Come

A shining example of this mission is afforded by the recipient of the SHTM’s fourth Lifetime Achievement Award, whose presentation was another high point in the evening’s celebrations. Continuing its annual tradition of honouring outstanding contributions to hospitality and education in Hong Kong and beyond, the School bestowed this year’s award on inspirational hotelier Mr P. R. S. Oberoi, under whose leadership the Oberoi Group has spearheaded the development of the luxury hotel sector for more than 70 years. Mr Oberoi was represented at the ceremony by his son Mr Vikram Oberoi, who spoke warmly of his father’s dedication, passion and, above all, integrity. “Our commitment to excellence is well supported by distinguished individuals such as Mr Oberoi”, said Dean Chan.

No less valuable are connections closer to home. The School is grateful for the tremendous support it receives from the local community as well as the global industry. The support of its alumni, PolyU’s biggest and most active alumni network, is particularly important. Fittingly, then, another feature of the evening was a dialogue with four exceptional SHTM alumni. After the first course of the gala dinner had been served, allowing guests to experience for themselves Hotel ICON’s exceptional cuisine, Dr Daniel Leung – himself a three-time graduate of the SHTM – and fresh graduate Mr Jinn Kwon took the stage to welcome the four alumni back to their alma mater.

Each of the four panelists had graduated in a different decade of the School’s history, and all agreed that the SHTM had been instrumental in helping them achieve personal and professional success. Since graduating in the 1990s, Ms Alison Yau, Chairman of the SHTM Alumni Association, has built on the skills and knowledge gained at the SHTM to realise a very simple dream – to make Hong Kong travellers happy. Mr Ray Wang, a 2007 graduate and now Deputy General Manager of Fliggy, Alibaba Group’s online hotel business, is grateful to the SHTM for “enabling, empowering and encouraging students by delivering truly practical values”.

Mr Wilson Lee, a 1980s graduate and now General Manager, Hyatt Regency Hong Kong, Sha Tin, is eager to give back through the School’s mentorship scheme, “helping young people make something of their dreams in the hospitality and tourism industry”. A direct beneficiary of this scheme was Ms Kristina Braun, a 2017 graduate who recently relocated to her native Germany after rising to be an assistant hotel manager in Hong Kong. “Thanks to the SHTM”, she said, “I will hopefully accomplish even more in the future”.

It is impossible to doubt the potential of this new generation of hospitality and tourism leaders, who are responsible for carrying forward the School’s legacy into the future. As this unforgettable evening drew to a close, accompanied by music by talented SHTM student Celine Chu and her trombone quartet, the School’s mentorship scheme, a direct beneficiary of this scheme was Ms Kristina Braun, a 2017 graduate who recently relocated to her native Germany after rising to be an assistant hotel manager in Hong Kong. “Thanks to the SHTM”, she said, “I will hopefully accomplish even more in the future”.

Continuing a yearly tradition of honouring outstanding personalities who have contributed substantially to hospitality and tourism in Hong Kong and worldwide, the SHTM recently bestowed its fourth Lifetime Achievement Award on legendary hotelier Mr P. R. S. Oberoi. Known as “Biki” to his friends, Mr Oberoi is the Executive Chairman of EIH Limited, the flagship company of the Oberoi Group, which has spearheaded the development of the luxury hotel sector for the last seven decades.

“I am grateful and honoured to receive the Lifetime Achievement Award”, said Mr Oberoi, “and would like to thank the entire team at the SHTM for this prestigious accolade”.

On 20 September, the award was announced to enthusiastic applause at a gala dinner for the SHTM’s 40th anniversary. The pioneering Hotel ICON was the perfect setting to celebrate a leader credited not only with redefining architectural and design standards for luxury hotels, but also with nurturing and empowering employees as stakeholders in the company.

Mr Oberoi was represented at the ceremony by his son Mr Vikram Oberoi, Managing Director and Chief Executive Officer, EIH Limited, who shared some moving insights into his father’s compassionate leadership. “Invest in people”, is the motto he holds dear. “Invest in their learning, their development and their growth.”

This mission is perfectly aligned with the School’s own. Warmly congratulating Mr Oberoi, Professor Kaye Chan, SHTM Dean, Chair Professor and Walter & Wendy Kwok Family Foundation Professor in International Hospitality Management, recognised the importance of such synergies, and how they help to support our commitment to excellence.

It is difficult to imagine a more well-deserving recipient of this year’s Lifetime Achievement Award than Mr P. R. S. Oberoi, a leader whose lifelong pursuit of excellence with integrity continues to set an example for the whole industry.
Graduation is a time to take stock of achievements and look forward to a bright future. This was certainly true of the 25th PolyU Congregation (SHTM) on 5 November, at which the School paid tribute to its 2019 class of graduating students. All 752 graduates now stand poised to join the ranks of the endlessly evolving hospitality and tourism industry, knowing that their time at SHTM has prepared them to forge their own legacies as global ambassadors for Asian hospitality.

This year’s Congregation saw 19 Diploma students honoured for Bachelor of Science and 31 Higher Diploma, 483 Master of Science, 183 Doctor of Philosophy, 35 Doctor of Science in Hotel Management, and 45 Doctor of Hotel and Tourism Management, 31 Higher Diploma students honoured for years of hard work and dedication. The students received their awards in three sessions through the day. Fittingly for such a momentous occasion, each session began with a rousing rendition of the national anthem.

Kicking off the first session was an energising speech by Guest of Honour, Ms Yemen Tsang, founder and Managing Director of HotelsMR Limited. Ms Tsang shared warm memories of her career progression – from making tea as an intern to building her own leading hotel recruitment company – and offered some insider tips on job hunting. “You don’t have to be the best”, she said, “but you do have to try your best”. This, according to Ms Tsang, is the only “formula for success” in the competitive world of hospitality.

Trying one’s best was also the theme of a valedictory speech by graduate representative Miss Amanda Putri Wantono, who took the stage after the first batch of degrees had been conferred. As SHTM Student of the Year 2018/19 and a First Class Honours graduate, Amanda was no stranger to success. However, she chose to highlight instead the importance of persistence, especially after failure. “Be a doer instead of a dreamer”, she urged her fellow graduates.

An alumnus who has kept this principle firmly in mind is Dr Louis Shih, Executive Director of Old Stone Hotels Company Limited, who received the Outstanding PolyU SHTM Alumni Award 2019. Dr Shih warned that working hard is not always enough. A true leader is someone who acts with integrity “in the interests of their society and community”.

Indeed, SHTM students are already gaining attention for their contributions to theory and practice. In the same session, Dr Li Lin received the Best D HTM Thesis Award 2018/19, and the Best Ph.D. Thesis Award 2018/19 was presented to Dr Richard Qiu.

Changing the World

The third session of the day saw the year’s last batch of graduates receive their degrees, redefining them to take the next step in their career journeys, and the last set of awards conferred. Miss Miki Chan of the Bachelor of Science in Hotel Management, described the efforts made by the SHTM to prepare its students for the wider world of hospitality and tourism. She and her fellow students are now ready to make their own mark. “We have leadership qualities within us and the world is going to notice.”

To quote Dean Chon, another word for graduation is “commencement”. The School heartily congratulates the 2019 class as they commence the next chapter of their lives as future leaders of our vibrant industry. We have every confidence in their ability to make the world a better place.
Growing in Tandem

Given the SHTM’s outstanding reputation it should come as no surprise that graduates go on to forge careers in a number of prestigious hotel companies. One such chain is the Rosewood Hotel Group, a Hong Kong headquartered hospitality group that is fast expanding internationally. Numerous graduates of the School’s Bachelor of Science in Hotel Management programme work at the Rosewood Hong Kong, forging their own careers as the chain pursues its expansion stage. We asked six graduates recently about how their experiences at the School have set them up for success, and how working at the hotel is advancing their careers.

The graduates were eager to explain how their time at the SHTM had helped to prepare them for the hospitality workforce, with most of them emphasising two key benefits: the opportunity to work with leading academics in the field, and a strong sense of community among students that lasts well after graduation.

For example, 2018 graduate Ms Lillian Tsang described the SHTM as “a place with many good leaders and mentors”, where students are always able to “meet and gain support from alumni from multiple fields”. Her comments were echoed by 2019 graduate Ms Pavithra Seneviratne, who added that learning from experts at the SHTM had given her the “necessary tools to understand the industry better”, and that she had always felt “a sense of belonging and care among SHTM alumni”.

2017 graduate Mr Pierandrea Falchi, who came all the way from Italy to enrol in the “renowned SHTM hotel management undergraduate programme”, reported that after his studies he could “speak six languages, at least to a colloquial level”. This, he believed, would not have been possible without “all the opportunities given to me by my school”.

Local resident and 2016 graduate Mr Stephen Tai mentioned that meeting students and faculty members from diverse backgrounds at the SHTM had helped him “to adapt well into the working environment” in the Talent & Culture team at the Rosewood Hotel Group. His role, he explained, requires him to consider “multiple cultural perspectives when planning employee engagement initiatives”.

Another prevalent theme was how the SHTM inspires its students by exposing them to an array of cultures and perspectives. 2011 graduate Mr Zelotes Lam, who enrolled at the SHTM from Canada, mentioned that he had been motivated by the “diverse subjects offered and also the location of the school”.

2017 graduate Mr Pavithra Seneviratne, who added that learning from experts at the SHTM had helped him “to adapt well into the working environment” in the Talent & Culture team at the Rosewood Hotel Group. His role, he explained, requires him to consider “multiple cultural perspectives when planning employee engagement initiatives”.

Limitless Opportunities

When asked about their reasons for joining the company, the graduates were quick to emphasise its “limitless opportunities for personal growth and development”, as Lillian put it. This, according to Pavithra, was in no small part due to the brand’s rapid expansion worldwide, for which it has been “looked up to and admired, especially in recent years”. Going even further, 2016 graduate Ms Krusty Li called the Rosewood Hotel Group a “game changer in the hospitality industry”. Stephen felt the same, describing the brand as “the best in class” in the industry. He said he was attracted to the “exciting opportunities” it offers, especially in the Asia-Pacific market.

All of the graduates agreed that certain learning experiences at the SHTM had helped to prepare them for the rigours of working at the Rosewood Hong Kong. For example, Stephen recalled that internships at Hotel ICON helped him to “visualise textbook knowledge in reality” by showing him the real-world intricacies of human resources deployment. The “all-round HR knowledge and experience” he gained from this experience, along with “both soft and technical skills”, allowed him to seamlessly transition to his job after graduation.

Krusty, who had been part of the SHTM’s Elite Management Programme at Hotel ICON, said that the programme is of great “benefit for undergraduates as a first step in choosing a career path”. The “expertise in digital and social media” she developed at Hotel ICON has proved extremely useful at the Rosewood Hotel Group Corporate Office, where she works in the digital team.

Another invaluable aspect of the education provided at the SHTM is its strong links with other schools, such as the Lausanne Hotel School (EHL), which is the oldest hospitality school in the world. Lillian recalled that her exchange experience at the EHL helped her to embrace “a high degree of diversity” and cultivate a strong “sense of global citizenship”. These attributes, she said, came in handy when interning at the Rosewood Beijing, as they helped her understand the company’s core philosophy, “A Sense of Place”. This exposure, in turn, paved the way for her to become one of the first employees at the Rosewood Hong Kong.

As Zelotes put it, the SHTM is “an international leader in hospitality education” and Hong Kong is “the perfect place to learn about hospitality, with its long history of iconic hotels”. As the Rosewood Hotel Group expands and flourishes, its strong connection with the SHTM will undoubtedly continue to bear fruit.
As China’s Belt and Road Initiative (BRI) becomes a driving force for the global economy and social development, efforts to strengthen international cooperation on hospitality and tourism are more important than ever before. Answering this call, the 2nd One Belt One Road One Tourism (OBOROT) International Conference was held in Guilin, China on 13-15 October 2019. Hosted by the Belt and Road International University of Tourism, Uzbekistan and the Silk Road International Polytechnic of Tourism, Indonesia, the conference brought together more than 200 tourism educators, government officials and industry leaders from 64 countries to explore the theme of “Development, Marketing, Sustainability”.

Officiating at the opening ceremony were a host of prominent figures in the hospitality and tourism industry: Professor Kaye Chon, SHTM Dean, Chair Professor and Walter & Wendy Kwok Family Foundation Professor in International Hospitality Management; Mrs Lin Na, Secretary of the Party Committee of Guilin Tourism University; Professor Cheng Daojin, President of Guilin Tourism University; Mr Jia Yucheng, Director of the Guangxi Zhuang Autonomous Region Culture and Tourism Department; and Mrs Lu Xin, President of the China Vocational and Technical Education Association and former Deputy Minister of China’s Ministry of Education.

The focus shifted to tourism education and learning modes in the second plenary session. Dr Tony Tse, SHTM Professor of Practice (Industry Partnerships), spoke about experiential learning, a critical component of all of the SHTM’s programmes, with a focus on the role of hands-on learning in the school’s Hotel Management major.

The second day of the conference showcased the China-Overseas Youth Tourism Scholars Forum, which was set up to provide a platform for all sectors to discuss practical cooperation on tourism development. A series of informative presentations covered climate policy, a case study of Guilin’s tourist industry, the economic growth effects of urban tourism and tourist behaviours, perceptions and attitudes. All had important implications for policy making on the development of hospitality and tourism in the Belt and Road region.

The conference also made history with the promulgation of the Guilin Declaration, a pledge to foster international cooperation on tourism education, the tourism economy and the integration of culture and tourism in BRI countries and regions. The Declaration, which achieved the consensus of the SHTM, GTU, the Palembang Polytechnic of Tourism, Indonesia and the Silk Road International University of Tourism, Uzbekistan, emphasises the importance of collaboration in three key areas: education, the economy and the integration of culture and tourism. These areas also featured heavily in this year’s conference programme, as the development, marketing and sustainability of tourism rely greatly on the success of such initiatives.

At the close of the conference, overseen by Professor Chon, it was jointly agreed to communicate the details of the OBOROT Guilin Declaration. The Declaration recognises that the promotion of tourism education in the BRI region is crucial to the sustainable development of the global hospitality and tourism industry. This will depend on academic exchange between institutions, to which training forums and conferences such as OBOROT will be indispensable.

The Declaration further pledges to support international cooperation to promote the tourism economy in the BRI region to strengthen economic development and reduce poverty. The agreement concludes with a call for respect for the traditional cultures of the individual countries and regions along the Belt and Road, highlighting the need to endorse local tourism brands and products to cultivate a culture of appreciation and understanding.

Next October, the spotlight will fall on Central Asia, when the Silk Road International University of Tourism in Samarkand, Uzbekistan will host the third OBOROT International Conference.
Beyond Gateways

As the demand for Asia-Pacific tourism intensifies, it is becoming increasingly important to ensure that visitors can adequately access and explore every part of the region. This was the mission of the 13th UNWTO/PATA Forum on Tourism Trends and Outlook, organised by the SHTM in partnership with the World Tourism Organization (UNWTO), the Pacific Asia Travel Association (PATA), the Guilin Municipal People’s Government and the Guangxi Zhuang Autonomous Region’s Department of Culture and Tourism.

The Forum was held on 17-18 October at the Shangri-La Hotel in Guilin, China. The event attracted close to 200 attendees from numerous countries, including local and overseas government officials, researchers, consultants, media professionals and other major representatives of the hospitality and tourism industry. Over two days, the attendees had the chance to share their expertise, study current industry trends and discuss the best ways to make rural destinations accessible to tourists and strengthen policy and infrastructure for more effective tourist dispersal.

At the conference’s opening ceremony, Mr. Manuel Butler, Executive Director of the UNWTO, said that his organisation was “full of expectations for the future of the Guilin Forum”, having received unwavering support from the Guilin government over the years. He described the Forum as the ideal setting to explore and solve the various technical and technological challenges currently facing the tourism industry. Mr. Trevor Weltman, Chief of Staff of PATA, agreed with Mr. Butler. He expressed the firm hope that the Forum would help to provide “new concepts, new paths and new patterns for global tourism”.

In his opening remarks, Professor Kaye Chon, SHTM Dean, Chair Professor and Walter & Wendy Kwok Family Foundation Professor in International Hospitality Management, noted that the Forum has “grown into a renowned brand name” over the last 13 years, offering an invaluable platform to discuss “current issues in tourism, identify problems through analysis of trends, and define the future”. He added that this year’s theme, “Beyond Gateways: Dispersal Policies, Capacity Management and Rural Tourism”, would help to promote a model of tourism development that emphasises sustained tourism impact and dispersal rather than merely attracting more tourists.

Mr. Li Bin, Vice Chairman of the Guangxi Zhuang Autonomous Region Government, praised the Forum for promoting Guangxi’s tourism development through various forms of international collaboration and exchange. Today, tourism plays a key role in Guangxi’s civic, economic and ecological development. Mr. Li added that the ever-increasing possibilities for international cooperation provided by the Forum will only strengthen Guangxi’s implementation of sustainable tourism, as well as opening up further market opportunities.

Also leading a data-centric workshop on the first day was Dr. Honggen Xiao, SHTM Associate Professor. The workshop looked at how analytics-based “smart tourism” could ensure efficient tourist dispersal. Accompanying Dr. Xiao were four speakers: Ms. Wendy Kneel, Vice President of the LA Convention and Tourism Board, Professor Dimitrios Buhais from Bournemouth University, Dr. Fuhua Song, CEO of Drore Information and Technology, and Dr. Xiaodong Hai from Smart Steps Digital Technology Company Limited.

On the second day, Mr. Ruescas chaired another keynote session, which focused on sustainable tourism. He was accompanied by Mr. Vincent Nijs, Chief Executive of VISITFLANDERS and the Former Chairman of the European Travel Commission’s Market Intelligence Committee and Market Research Committee, Dr. Paul Rogers, Co-Founder and Director of Planet Happiness, Mr. Prasad Jayasuriya, Director of Tourism Planning and Development at the Sri Lanka Tourism Development Authority, and finally His Excellency Thok Sokhom, Undersecretary of State in Cambodia’s Ministry of Tourism.

Professor John Koldowski returned to moderate the day’s second keynote session, which looked at how tourism growth can be managed. The panel also comprised Professor Hanyan Song, Associate Dean and Chair Professor of the SHTM, Professor Joseph Cheer from the Centre of Tourism Research at Wakayama University, Mr. Ahmed Eiweida, Global Coordinator for Cultural Heritage and Sustainable Tourism, Social, Urban, Rural and Resilience Global Practice at the World Bank, and Dr. Zhongguang Li, Vice President of China Tourism Academy, Ministry of Culture and Tourism.

At the conclusion of the Forum, Dean Chon said that the diverse discussions this year would definitely “benefit the development of global tourism”. The SHTM is privileged to be at the forefront of this initiative and looks forward to next year’s forum.
Remarkable Experiences

The SHTM’s postgraduate programmes attract students from around the world who are excited to experience the vibrancy of Hong Kong and the SHTM’s world-leading education model. Whether from mainland China, France, Iran, Pakistan, Peru, Portugal, Slovakia, Thailand, the UK, the US or elsewhere, they are always eager to explain what makes the School special for them.

After studying for her undergraduate degree at Nankai University in China and her Master’s degree at Texas Tech University in the US, Ms Amber Hu is fulfilling her dream of pursuing her Doctor of Philosophy in Hotel and Tourism Management (Ph.D.) studies under the School’s ground-breaking professional Doctor of Hotel and Tourism Management (D-HTM).

Apart from the professors’ “impressive academic backgrounds”, Amber was attracted by the world-class city and its “beautiful natural seashore with modern skyscrapers”. After completing her degree, she plans to combine her experience of running an IT company with her hotel and tourism management knowledge to promote the development of smart tourism in China and overseas.

According to fellow D-HTM student Mr Teerawut Chanyasak, from Thailand, the programme provides a “balanced theoretical and practical approach”. Learning, he said, is enriched by classmates’ diverse backgrounds and faculty members’ extensive industry and managerial experience.

Mr Guy Llewellyn, a US citizen who is a permanent resident in Hong Kong, remarked that selecting the SHTM to undertake Doctor of Philosophy in Hotel and Tourism Management (Ph.D.) studies was “the most obvious choice”, because he could “learn, meet and collaborate with some of the top researchers in the industry”. Another Ph.D. student, Ms Hakimeh Nasiri from Iran, lauded the faculty for helping her to expand her network. She also highlighted her “unique experience” of working with “peer Ph.D. students from 20 different countries of the world” that allowed her “to explore 20 different lifestyles, backgrounds, and attitudes”.

This appreciation of talented staff and cross-cultural opportunities was echoed by Mr Adam Gašparovič, a Slovakian student in the tripartite MSc in Global Hospitality Business (MGH) programme, who noted that the faculty’s professional experience provides a link between theory and practice that enhances graduates’ employability. Students from around the world in the MGH programme benefit from the opportunity to “experience three key world regions”, with a semester each spent at a different institution – the SHTM in Hong Kong, the Lausanne Hotel School and the Conrad N. Hilton College at the University of Houston.

A particular highlight of the MGH programme for Ms Annika Glennon from the UK is the “unique insight” she gained from what she called the “incredible” business trip to Macau. With the Asian tourism market “just at the beginning of its development”, Annika is also aware that exposure to different Asian cultures is an essential aspect of students’ career development.

Sharing Knowledge and Wisdom

For Mr Abdul Abdullah, the MSc in International Hospitality Management (IHM) offers the “highest quality of education available”. He has been inspired by the commitment and passion of the faculty and finds their willingness to continually answer students’ questions an “amazing experience”. Once Abdul returns home to Pakistan, he aims to “continue the mission of SHTM by spreading the quality knowledge and wisdom” through the country, which he says has everything necessary for a successful tourist industry except well-trained professionals.

Ms Maria Morey Poma from Peru, who is studying in the MSc in International Tourism and Convention Management (ITCM) programme, is looking to take on a management position in an Asian luxury hotel when she completes her studies. With an F&B background, Maria commented that the programme was “broadening my scope” and that she had benefited greatly from developing a worldwide network and enhancing her research skills at a School with outstanding academic staff and a “worldwide reputation”.

Likewise, Portuguese student Mr Joao De Melo Pires, who is studying in the SHTM’s MSc in International Wine Management (IWM) programme – the only one of its kind in a rapidly developing region for the wine sector – said that the course leaders “wake up our curiosity, encouraging passion and enthusiasm”.

The exchange trip to Bordeaux, one of the wine capitals of the world, was a highlight of the IWM programme for Ms Lena Li, giving her the opportunity not just to learn more about wine, but also to get to know and share personal experiences with so many people from different backgrounds. Lena advised prospective students not to miss this “experience of a lifetime”.

Other students also had words of advice to inspire students who are thinking of applying to join one of the School’s postgraduate programmes. Ms Emmanuelle Neu from France, who is studying in the IHM, suggested that students should “work hard, be organised and use all the resources provided by the University”. Joao agreed that hard work “always pays off”, but added that students should also find their passion and live fulfilling lives.

An important tip from Mr Zhi Ye Dai from mainland China, who is studying in the MSc in ICM programme, is to “get your language skills ready and get used to studying in English”. Finally, Abdul offered the reassurance that “you will never regret selecting the SHTM for your studies” as it was the “best decision I made in my life”. Are you ready to make that decision?
As part of its unswerving commitment to the hospitality and tourism industry, the SHTM is always at the forefront of providing a wide array of opportunities for industry players to hone their skills and better understand their situations, enabling them to move the industry forward. Recent highlights of these efforts include a range of regional Executive Development Programmes and an important consultancy project tailored to meet specific industry needs.

Experts from the School travelled around the region last year and early this year, engaging hotels, government bodies and educational institutions. From April to October, for instance, SHTM academics provided a series of lectures to the Grand Bay Hotel in Zhuhai, mainland China, covering everything from innovation and leadership in the hospitality sector to human resources management.

On 1 November the SHTM began advising the Institute for Hospitality and Tourism Studies at Duy Tan University in Danang, Vietnam on how to prepare for the UNWTO TedQual certification audit, preparing documents and actions to be taken during the audit process. This project is expected to last until October this year.

Finally, a feature of the School’s industry engagement in the last quarter of 2019 was the completion of an SHTM+ICON Consultancy project led by Dr Sangwon Park. Having made ground-breaking use of Big Data in a travel pattern analysis for the Korea Tourism Organisation, the team helped the Organisation identify the intra- and inter-city travel movement patterns of international travellers in South Korea.

Whether helping government bodies, fair goers, senior executives or life-long learners, the School ensures that industry players experience the cutting-edge benefits of hospitality and tourism knowledge and practice delivered by world-renowned experts.

Research Horizons

Softly, Softly, Anime Fans are Drawn to Japan

The popularity of anime, Japanese animated television shows and films, is motivating Hong Kong fans to visit Japan in a powerful example of cultural “soft power”, argue the SHTM’s Dr Wantanee Sunthikul, Ms Carmen Li and a collaborator in a recently published research paper. Focusing on the reaction of Generation Y anime fans from Hong Kong to the Japanese government’s promotion of anime content under the “Cool Japan” initiative, the researchers provide ground-breaking evidence of how and why promoting a country’s popular culture abroad can motivate inbound tourism. Their results understandably have profound implications for destination marketers and policy makers in Japan and beyond.

Hearts and Minds

Tourists today, the researchers observe, are more sophisticated and more demanding than ever before, placing destinations under increasing pressure to find new and better ways of attracting visitors. Nowhere is this pressure felt more keenly than in the Asia-Pacific region, where growing competition and more demanding than ever tourists today, the researchers explain that whereas “hard” power involves the use or threat of force, soft power “represents a more indirect way of influencing people based on the attraction of ideas and culture”. It is focused on winning hearts and minds, and it works best when based on popular culture, given the enormous influence such content has on people’s attitudes and values.

The researchers show that innovative soft-power strategies “can be significant tools for building positive impressions, countering negative impressions and gaining cultural power.” Films, novels, and games, for example, “can stimulate travel to the destinations associated with them”, which in turn helps to forge a positive image of the destinations overseas. The use of such tools has already had “a demonstrable effect on tourism” in the Asia-Pacific region, the researchers report, as overseas enthusiasts flood in to visit the production studios of popular films and television series.

Cool Japan

The researchers show that Japan is a shining example of the judicious use of soft power. This is exemplified by the “Cool Japan” initiative, launched in 2012 to promote Japan through content such as anime, comics, films, fashion and food. Testament to the success of this initiative, and to the government’s decades-long strategy of nation branding, Japan is emerging as a cultural superpower. “The new and cooler image of Japan projected to the world”, write the researchers, “has been well embraced throughout the world, and especially in the Asia-Pacific region”.

Anime is one of the most convenient channels for spreading Japanese culture’s “Japan’s dissemination of anime as a cultural diplomacy product”, the researchers explain, “has aroused the desire of people around the world to better acquaint themselves with Japanese culture”. Some of its biggest fans are in Hong Kong, where Japanese popular culture has been enormously popular since the 1970s – long before Hello Kitty, icon of anime content of such promotional success. Since the 1970s – long before Hello Kitty, icon of Japanese popular culture was appointed as ambassador to Hong Kong as part of the hugely successful “Visit Japan” campaign.

The researchers note that “the anime content of such promotional endeavours appeals primarily to younger Hong Kong citizens, the so-called ‘Generation Y’. In 2017, 2 million tourists from Hong Kong,
Anime and Travel

Analyzing the survey’s results, the researchers found that they “affirm earlier findings that those who consume anime are motivated to travel to Japan and possess a profound interest of the destination”.

However, the picture is a little more complicated, as the researchers note that “this positive effect is dependent upon, and somewhat proportional to, the extent of one’s involvement with anime in terms of time spent”. They found that viewers classified as “enthusiastic” (who watched Japanese anime for three or more hours per week) exhibited a very strong desire to attend anime-related events and travel to Japan as an anime destination. However, the researchers warn that “merely casual engagement with the medium is not sufficient to influence such a desire”.

This study offers a striking demonstration of how travel motivation can be understood within the dynamics of soft power and provides the first empirical evidence for a “complex image” that links degrees of anime involvement with motivation to travel. As competition among tourism destinations increases in the Asia-Pacific region, the researchers conclude that “understanding these nuances can provide a valuable marketing advantage”.

But the implications extend beyond tourism to geopolitics, and from Japan to the global soft power that Japan wields around the world. By stimulating tourism, the researchers suggest that “animation” could indeed promote increased consumption of anime, as an instrument of Japanese soft power, and “play a rule in motivating youth to desire to visit Japan”. DMOs should aim to develop “anime products and events that meet the unique needs and preferences of different groups of anime fans, constituting different potential tourism subniches”.

The researchers add that young people with less interest in anime may be deterred by their parents and teachers, many of whom disapprove of anime’s often sexualised portrayals of romance. Perhaps, then, Japanese DMOs might also consider ways of promoting a more wholesome image of the medium among members of Hong Kong’s older generation to help maintain and grow this invaluable source of market demand for tourism.

Beyond Japan

Restaurateurs will for the first time have a highly accurate way to measure their financial constraints, thanks to a pioneering index recently developed by the SIFTM’s Dr Sung Guny Mun and Dr Simonate. Although the restaurant industry is a vital driver of economic growth around the globe, restaurant firms are still subject to financial constraints that can pose a severe threat to their survival. Until now, little effort has been made to explore the financial pressure facing firms in the specific context of the restaurant industry. In their ground-breaking new study, the researchers offer restaurant managers a unique tool for measuring and mitigating these constraints, based on the financial and operational characteristics of the restaurants themselves.

Growth Brings Challenges

The restaurant sector is experiencing phenomenal growth. In the US alone, the number of restaurant employees has reached 14.4 million, representing 10% of all US workers. Americans today are spending close to half of their food budget on eating out, and this trend shows no signs of slowing down. Restaurant sales are just as positive in Europe and Asia, where hospitality is a key driver of tourism growth and thus economic growth.

Nevertheless, challenges abound. Despite the sector’s progress, the researchers note that “restaurant managers are not free from business obstacles, such as financial difficulties, policy instability, severe market competition and a lack of resources, knowledge or competence”. Financial constraints pose a particular threat to businesses’ survival and success. During the 2008 financial crisis, for example, financially constrained US firms were forced to cancel their investments and even to sell profitable assets to secure cash. This dramatically reduced employment, technology expenditure and capital investment, with devastating consequences for the US economy.

Clearly, given the major contribution made by the restaurant sector to economies worldwide, it is vital to help restaurant managers accurately identify the financial constraints facing their businesses. This will enable them not only to avoid financial risks in the short term, but also to promote sustainable business growth in the long run. However, research in this area is surprisingly scarce. “Only a few studies have investigated financial constraints in hospitality academia”, write the researchers. To make matters worse, previous studies have tended to use roundabout ways of measuring financial constraints, as such constraints are not always directly observable.

Restaurants Under Pressure

Recognising the urgent need to directly measure the financial constraints faced by the restaurant sector, the researchers set out to develop “a new index that could reflect restaurant firms’ unique financial constraint characteristics”. The best way to do this, they decided, was to investigate the particular strengths and weaknesses of restaurant firms. Any truly effective index of financial constraints will need to take into account the varying strengths and weaknesses of firms in the restaurant industry. Six important characteristics emerged. The first was financial profit. They hypothesised that the more profit a restaurant makes from its operations, the less financially constrained it will be. Other positive features were asset tangibility – the number of physical assets a restaurant possesses – and employee number, because the restaurant industry is labour-intensive.

On the other side, the researchers identified three characteristics of restaurant firms likely to increase their financial constraints. The first was accounts payable, the money owed by a restaurant to its suppliers. Another important feature was whether the selling assets ‘could be a financing source of last resort equivalence to about 29% of the region’s total population, visited Japan. Many of these visitors were members of Generation Y and anime enthusiasts, passionate about the medium’s “complex storylines and engagement that often provide thick tales of human existence”.

It may seem no great leap to assume that anime consumption actually motivates young people in Hong Kong to travel to Japan. Surprisingly, however, very little empirical research has investigated the relationship between this popular culture medium and Generation Y’s actual travel intentions and behaviour. Recognising that such insights “would be useful to destination management and policy makers, as well as broader soft power pop culture promotion initiatives”, the researchers set out to fill this gap.

Anime Fans

To explore the real travel behaviour of Hong Kong’s vast pool of young anime consumers, the researchers set out to survey Hong Kong citizens born between 1981 and 2002 who had watched anime at some point in their lives. These members of Generation Y completed a questionnaire at two large anime-related events, Comic World Hong Kong and C3 in Hong Kong.

Ultimately, the researchers were able to collect information on anime consumption and motivation to visit Japan from 2018 members of Generation Y. The composition of the sample was itself interesting. A slight majority of the respondents were female, which, the researchers suggest, may reflect the recent rise of “female-centered narratives” in Asian manga. More of the female respondents receivedanime finances than their male counterparts, but the male respondents generally tended to watch more anime than females.
for firms with financial difficulties”. They thus proposed that “as a restaurant firm’s sale of fixed assets increases, it is more likely to be financially constrained”.

Real Restaurants

Having identified these potential indicators of firms’ financial constraints, the researchers needed to test their hypotheses with real data from the restaurant industry. In the US, job growth in the restaurant industry has outpaced the average, and restaurant firms continue to be among the key economic drivers through job creation. The US was thus the ideal setting to investigate real restaurants. The researchers selected more than 4,000 US restaurants for analysis and tracked their performance over half a century, from 1963 to 2014.

To find out which characteristics of restaurants make them particularly vulnerable to financial pressure, the researchers first divided the restaurants into two groups – more and less financially constrained than the industry average – to examine the six proposed indicators. To ensure that their model was as strong as possible, they also included several criteria used in past studies to measure financial constraints.

The next step was perhaps the most important of all. “When a new index is developed”, the researchers observe, “it also needs to be validated”. Not only was this index tailored to the unique characteristics of the restaurant industry, that is not only a groundbreaking departure from past research, but it is also practically meaningful. “An appropriate understanding of a firm’s level of financial constraint”, the researchers explain, “will help restaurant managers to better manage their expenses, avoid short-term budgetary risks and capitalise on opportunities for long-term growth.”

Using this important new tool, explain the researchers, “restaurant firms’ financial constraints can be estimated with more accuracy and, thus, actions taken to address financial constraints can be more effective”.

Making China’s Hotels Great

As China and its hotel industry gain prominence on the global stage, more and more foreign investors are turning their attention to this huge and extremely promising market. Chinese hotels are in desperate need of strategies to compete with the high-quality amenities and excellent service demanded by foreign tourists and, increasingly, by Chinese consumers themselves. Competition is particularly fierce in the luxury segment, the researchers comment, where Chinese hotel companies are falling short of international standards, and what they can do to close the gap.

China’s tourism industry is flourishing. The researchers note that the last few decades have seen not only rocketing demand, with inbound tourism increasing by 75 times since 1978, but also rapid growth in supply. In 2013, there were over 13,000 star-rated hotels in China, compared with fewer than 3,000 in 1994, and this figure continues to rise. Yet, domestic hotel companies are not the only beneficiaries. The tourism industry becomes an ever more important driver of economic growth, its success spells good news for China as a whole.

However, the researchers are careful to point out that this phenomenon’s progress inevitably brings challenges. Chinese hotels still lag behind those in developed countries in the West. “Since the 1980s”, they write, “the Chinese hospitality industry has been suffering from overcapacity, quality issues, low efficiency and decreasing operational scale”.

Foreign hotel companies have been quick to fill this gap, bringing their flagship brands to China to deliver the high-quality amenities and excellent service demanded by foreign tourists and, increasingly, by Chinese consumers themselves. Competition is particularly fierce in the luxury segment, the researchers comment, where Chinese hotel companies are “outgunned” by international brands such as Marriott, Hyatt and the InterContinental Hotel Groups.

Difficulties in Quality

To make matters worse, the gap in quality between domestic and international hotels is increasingly visible with the rise of social media and e-commerce. According to the researchers, dissatisfied guests can now post reviews, photos and even videos showing exactly how and why Chinese hotels are falling short of international standards, and what they can do to close the gap.

443 hotel chains in China’s three biggest (and most international) cities: Beijing, Shanghai and Guangzhou.

All of the hotels were in the luxury segment, where domestic hotels face the greatest threat from their international rivals. About half were operated by mainland Chinese brands, and the other half were run by American, European or other Asian companies. This allowed the researchers to rigorously compare domestic and international standards from the perspective of real guests, taking into account cultural differences between China and the West.

The next step was to analyse the hotels in light of a few carefully chosen hypotheses. For example, the researchers expected management response strategies (such as empathy, an apology or even compensation) to be more effective for domestic than international hotels. Guests at Chinese hotels generally expect poorer service than those staying at international hotels, so when Chinese managers do respond swiftly to complaints, they have a good chance of surpassing guests’ expectations.

Closing the Gap

A series of rigorous statistical analyses yielded some important findings. First, the researchers discovered that tourists in Beijing, Guangzhou and Shanghai “have more confidence in and prefer to stay at luxury hotels belonging to international hotel chains” than domestic firms. The next step was to figure out how and why international luxury hotels are outclassing their Chinese counterparts, and what can be done to close the gap.

In their online evaluations, guests expressed particular satisfaction with the quiet and clean conditions offered by international hotel brands. They found it harder to sleep in Chinese hotels, and were dissatisfied with their level of hygiene. Service was also poorer in domestic hotels. The implications for the local hotel sector are clear.

As the researchers note, the managers of Chinese luxury hotels should now focus on “improving their service quality, cleanliness, and sleep environment” to satisfy more guests.

International luxury hotel chains were also found to take consumer feedback more seriously than their Chinese counterparts did. More than half of the Chinese hotels never responded to guests’ online reviews, whereas most of the international chains implemented management response strategies. This, explain the researchers, “indicates that international hotel chains have a better understanding of guest requirements and are also more likely to budget for service recovery and online review-management strategies”.

To meet the standards offered by their foreign competitors, domestic hotel managers should take action to identify and meet the needs of their guests by carefully considering and responding to online feedback. The more detailed their responses, the better. But making guests happy is not the only reason for domestic hotels to adopt more positive management response strategies, suggest the researchers. “Managers can also learn a lot about how to further improve their services from the complaints and suggestions they receive.”

China and Beyond

This ground-breaking study shows Chinese hotel brands precisely where they fall short of international standards, and offers the perfect solution. As the researchers note, “management response is a fact-based, cost-saving, and more effective method than allocating resources to improve product and quality standards without listening to customer needs.”

With the rapid growth of China’s tourism industry as a major contributor to the economy, closing the service-quality gap between domestic and international hotel chains will ultimately enhance China’s overall economic development. However, the value of the findings is not limited to China. The researchers also offer some sage advice for international hotel managers with mature response strategies: “write more!”

Responding to guests’ online reviews with more detailed feedback is an excellent way to improve their satisfaction—an insight of value to hotels worldwide.

Fragrant Memories in the Making

Hotels that use scent aim to capitalise on its ability to “cue memories and conjure up emotions”, according to the SHTM’s Dr Basak Denizci Guillet, Dr Deniz Kucukpinar and co-researcher, yet little is known about how guests respond to the diffusion of various scents throughout hotels. The researchers explored customers’ responses to scent and how hotels can best make use of it to create positive experiences and build brand loyalty. They found that scent was indeed conducive to guest enjoyment, but only when not overused.

Power of Scent

Of all of our senses, the researchers argue, the sense of smell evokes the most powerful emotional reactions and can often be a “powerful memory trigger”. Scent is, they write, closely connected to the brain’s limbic system, where emotional processing takes place. It should be no surprise then that many hotels around the world have in recent years sought to harness the power of smell by creating their own signature scents that “represent their identity”.

Major hotel chains such as Mandarin Oriental, Le Méridien, Langham and Shangri-La have created signature scents, the researchers note, that are used as ambient aromas throughout their hotels, delivered through “heating and cooling systems, via discreet atomizers or by way of ingeniously diffusers in the lighting”. Taking the idea further, some hotels even offer products featuring their signature scent, such as home fragrances and candles, which guests can purchase for their own use.

The researchers suggest that by creating their own unique fragrances, hotels aim to produce an emotional reaction from customers. Because scent is so strongly linked to memory, using the same scent across different locations can also evoke the same pleasant memories among guests. Nevertheless, despite the strong rationale for using scent branding, there has been little or no research on how hotel guests actually respond to it. Without such knowledge, it is difficult for hotel companies to make the best use of scent, prompting the researchers to claim that it is an “overlooked subject in hospitality and tourism research”.

Scentless Place

To address this lack of understanding, the researchers surveyed customers of a luxury international hotel chain in Hong Kong. The chain has developed its own scent, a “combination of ginger flower, peace lily, tuberose, lemongrass, and vanilla”, which is piped into lobbies and reception areas through the air-conditioning systems. The same scent is used in all of the company’s hotels around the world, and guests can take it home with them by purchasing a room spray, essential oil or candle from the hotel gift shop.

According to the hotel management, the company wanted to create a signature scent that would increase brand loyalty by giving customers a “sense of place”. Customers should be able to instantly recognise that they are in the hotel, regardless of where in the world they happen to be.

The researchers set out to “identify the feelings and emotions evoked among the guests at one of the chain’s hotels, who were asked to complete a questionnaire that measured emotions such as happiness/delight, sensitivity/desire, energy, soothing/peacefulness, hunger/thirst, interest, nostalgia, unpleasant feelings, and spirituality. Further questions asked guests how they felt about the use of scent in various locations in the hotel—such as the lobby and reception area, restaurant and bar, restrooms, guest rooms and the spa and fitness centre – and about their satisfaction, loyalty and likelihood of revisiting the hotel.

Of 326 guests surveyed in the hotel lobby, the majority were middle aged, of Asian origin and with high levels of education. The main reason they travelled was for pleasure followed by business, and the average length of stay was 3.26 days. Although 40% had never stayed at the hotel before, 15% had stayed two or three times and 15% had stayed at least four times.

Happiness and Delight

More than 90% of the guests confirmed they had noticed the scent in the hotel. When the researchers reviewed the text associated with individual emotions evoked by the scent, “refreshed” received the highest score of 5.85 out of 10, while “happy”, “relaxed” and “comfort” all scored over 5.5. The lowest scores were for negative emotions such as “sadness”, which scored less than 2. Further analysis of these emotions showed that they could be grouped into four categories, which the researchers named Happiness and Delight,

POINTS TO NOTE

- Hotels make vital contributions to tourism and economic growth in China.
- Chinese hotels offer poorer service and facilities than their international counterparts.
- Chinese hotel managers must fill specific gaps to meet international standards.
- Responding swiftly and appropriately to guests’ feedback is a highly effective way of improving their satisfaction.

feelings. These categories made it possible to explore the relationships among the emotions and other variables such as guests’ loyalty to the hotel brand and their intention to revisit.

The emotions in the happiness and delight category, followed by the sensuality category, were the “most dominant emotions evoked by the hotel scent”, according to the researchers. Guests who strongly endorsed these positive emotions were also likely to express greater satisfaction with their stay at the hotel and greater motivation to visit the hotel again.

These guests also had a slightly stronger sense of loyalty to the brand and were more likely to purchase the scent to take home with them, although the researchers note that these associations with scent were not particularly strong. Although many of the guests reported that the scent evoked feelings of hunger and memories, these emotions did not seem to influence their satisfaction with the hotel or its overall atmosphere.

Not for Everyone

The guests were also given the opportunity to write their thoughts about the scent in their own words. Most of them described their feelings as “strong”, “refreshing” and “intense” and were positive about the use of scent in the hotel, with around 10% indicating that they did not like “the hotel-scent trend”. Even among those who liked the scent, the majority preferred it to be used only in some parts of the hotel, particularly public areas such as the hotel lobby, restrooms and corridors. In contrast, “hotels should refrain from diffusing scent in guest rooms, function spaces and restaurants. These findings led the researchers to caution that hotels should be careful in the way they pipe scent through their central air-conditioning systems because it can become overwhelming to the senses and negatively influence guests’ overall hotel experience.

Experiential Tourism

Today’s consumers are increasingly seeking pleasurable and memorable experiences, which the researchers note has given rise to a new term “experiential marketing”. In the tourism field, experiential marketers seek to create “direct and valuable connections between organisations and their guests”, for instance by providing sensory experiences that trigger positive emotions. The findings of the study thus suggest that using ambient scent may be a way for hotels to create “memorable experiences for guests” while also building brand loyalty and stimulating positive word-of-mouth. At the same time, hoteliers should be cautious in the use of powerful aromas that could be off-putting to those who find them unpleasant or overpowering, presumably creating rather less pleasant memorable experiences.

POINTS TO NOTE

- Scent may be the most powerful of all the senses for evoking emotions and memories.
- Hotels are increasingly using ambient scent to create emotional experiences.
- For most guests, a hotel’s scent evokes happiness and sensuality and increases their satisfaction.
- Over-use of scent in some areas of a hotel can be overpowering and create negative experiences.

The factors that determine the importance of hotel scents differ according to regions in a city, show the SHTM’s Dr Hengyun Li, Dr Mimi Li and their co-researcher in study published recently. Drawing on a Hong Kong case study, the researchers show that factors normally considered universally important in determining a location, such as traffic and transport, may not be as significant in some tourist destinations as in others. Their findings have obvious implications for hotel brands and their investors, among other players in the hospitality and tourism industry.

The emotions in the happiness and delight category were most prevalent off-putting.

The researchers chose Hong Kong as the focus of their study because the city has what they describe as a “mature hotel industry” following decades of tourism development. The city’s unique history had covered the northern part of Hong Kong Island and the Tsim Sha Tsui area, but constraints on land use have created a unique spatial pattern of urban development. Consequently, in the past couple of decades, hotel development has continued in the central business district, while also expanding into the surrounding suburban districts.

Taking into account this unique spatial pattern, in the first part of their study the researchers plotted the locations of hotels in Hong Kong that opened before the end of 2010 onto maps, using the location information from the hotel’s websites. The maps also included the distributions of factors such as metro stations and tourist attractions.

The map revealed what the researchers describe as “extremely high” concentration of hotels around the Kowloon-Hong Kong Island area, and relatively high concentrations around Tsuen Wan and Lantau Island. The high number of hotels close to commercial and business areas is a particular feature of Hong Kong, which is lacking in major historical and heritage sites and landmarks compared with tourist destinations in Europe and mainland China.

Second, the researchers note, methods used to predict hotel location choice assume that potential influencing factors have a uniform effect across the area under study. However, they suspect that this assumption may be incorrect because “location, price, services, and other features may have closer spatial associations that cannot be ignored”. In other words, whereas previous researchers have taken a global perspective in examining how different factors influence hotel location across a region, the researchers consider the influence of these factors at a smaller spatial scale.

Hong Kong Case Study

The researchers chose Hong Kong as the focus of their study because the city has what they describe as a “mature hotel industry” following decades of tourism development. The city’s unique history had covered the northern part of Hong Kong Island and the Tsim Sha Tsui area, but constraints on land use have created a unique spatial pattern of urban development. Consequently, in the past couple of decades, hotel development has continued in the central business district, while also expanding into the surrounding suburban districts.
City Centre versus Suburbs

In the second part of the study, the researchers examined the factors that influenced hotel location. When considering hotel location decisions across the whole region, the factors that had the greatest influence were the proportion of land used for traffic, population density and tourist attraction accessibility, whereas the proportion of green land had a small negative influence. However, this global model “may not tell the whole story” about hotel location choice, the researchers emphasise, because it ignores differences in the spatial relationships that might occur from one district to another.

To overcome this limitation, the researchers aggregated the data into two levels: at the tertiary planning unit level, dividing the region into 287 units for “planning population censuses”; and at the local level, the influencing factors at this local level revealed a rather different picture from that portrayed by the global model. Overall, the researchers observed a “core-periphery structure”, whereby the influencing factors seemed to have little effect in the urban centre but gradually increased in the peripheral regions. They describe this as a “poached egg” pattern of development.

Across the suburban areas, the researchers found that hotels were primarily located in areas with a high proportion of land used for traffic purposes and with good access to metro stations. This, they reason, suggests that when deciding to locate a hotel further away from the urban centre, the most important deciding factor is ease of transportation. Conversely, the researchers found that the effects of transport were comparatively weak in more central areas. They note that this suggests hoteliers “can consider other factors” when deciding on the best location for a hotel in the city centre because all areas have good transport facilities that appeal to tourists.

When considering green space and residential areas, the researchers found the opposite pattern. These factors had little effect on hotel location in most areas of Hong Kong, but a negative influence on hotels in the city centre. The researchers attribute this influence to “land policy and land use competition”, whereby newly build city-centre hotels occupy what was formerly green space and residential land.

Access to tourist attractions and population density exerted positive influences on hotel location choice in all regions, the researchers found. This, they note, is not surprising given that the “function of a hotel is to provide services for tourists and residents”. A more unexpected finding was that residents’ incomes had a negative effect on hotel density in the centre. Hotels normally tend to be built in “upmarket communities”, but in Hong Kong, with its high real estate prices, hoteliers may be more concerned with acquiring less costly land in low income districts.

In particular, investors considering a central location need to be too concerned about “conventional factors” such as transport accessibility. Rather, argue the researchers, they should focus on the agglomeration effect and choose locations that already have high densities of hotels. In the suburbs, however, transport and other factors should be considered carefully.

How to Pick the Perfect Hotel

Online travel agencies should be able to “better predict by 2022, with the greatest growth predicted in the Asia-Pacific region. As disposable income increases worldwide and more people in emerging markets gain access to high-speed Internet connectivity, OTAs are likely to eclipse their offline counterparts.”

However, the researchers warn that this growth creates challenges as well as opportunities for travellers and OTAs. As travel options proliferate online, consumers may experience information overload, and OTAs may struggle to differentiate themselves in an increasingly saturated market. How consumers make their travel purchases online – such as the flights or hotels they book – has thus become a hot topic of research in recent years. As the researchers note, understanding travellers’ decision-making behaviours is critical “not only for academics but also for practitioners”.

Lei Fang, Hengyuan Li and Mimi Li. (2019). “Does Hotel Location Tell a True Story? Evidence from Geographically Weighted Regression Analysis of Hotels in Hong Kong”, Tourism Management, Vol. 72, pp. 78-91.

Implications for Investors

The study is important because it reveals the limitations of previous research that has considered hotel location choice at a much broader level. By examining how various factors exert their influence differently at a smaller spatial scale, the researchers reveal some unexpected patterns that “can inform decision making when choosing appropriate locations for new hotels.”

In particular, investors considering a central location need to be too concerned about “conventional factors” such as transport accessibility. Rather, argue the researchers, they should focus on the agglomeration effect and choose locations that already have high densities of hotels. In the suburbs, however, transport and other factors should be considered carefully.

POI NTS TO NOTE

- Location is the key factor in hotel development.
- Yet, the defining factors of hotel location across areas are not clear.
- In Hong Kong, land use patterns have different effects on different areas, transport access is not an issue in the city centre and suburban hotels are more affected by a range of factors.
- Investors need to take heed of these differences to choose appropriate hotel locations.

Online Travel Agencies

According to the researchers, the Internet has revolutionised the way we travel. With the rise of e-commerce and the near-ubiquity of mobile handsets, it is now possible to compare a variety of travel options at the touch of a button, and to book a whole holiday in a matter of hours or even minutes. Yet the benefits for travellers go beyond mere convenience: the Internet is levelling the playing field in terms of access to information. “The advent of online travel agencies (OTAs),” write the researchers, “has contributed substantially to reducing information asymmetry between consumers and service providers by offering not only useful and up-to-date information but also price transparency.”

It is no surprise, then, that OTAs are more affected by a range of factors. The study published recently. Through identifying a simple typology of decision-making styles, the researchers offer unprecedented insights into precisely how and why Internet users decide which travel products to buy. As the online share of travel revenue increases in the Asia-Pacific region and beyond, their findings have far-reaching implications not only for online hotel marketing but also for the global tourism economy.

Purchasing travel products, explain the researchers, is a high-risk activity, a "complex process that requires an extensive decision-making strategy due to high cost and involvement." Generally, the researchers suggest, a traveller first forms an "awareness set", which contains all of the products – such as hotels – that they know about or have experienced. Next, they funnel down this vast range of travel options to "products that they are considering for purchase" in the final stage, they make a decision.

Complex Decision Making

Real Behavioural Data

The researchers thus set out “to understand the entire online booking process by analysing real behavioural data.” To do this, they needed to use multiple...
More and more people are going online to book their holidays. However, travellers’ online decision making remains poorly understood. There are, in fact, three main patterns of decision making, ranging from “arbitrary” to “comprehensive”. Online travel agencies can tailor their marketing strategies to suit different types of traveller and their approaches to decision making.

Customising Travel Options

The next step was to meticulously analyse the videos of the participants’ online decision making – down to their mouse clicks and cursor movements. The results were striking. The researchers identified three distinct patterns of decision making when booking online hotels. “Arbitrary” decision makers chose their hotels directly from the vast array of options available to them. “Standard” decision makers created a “wish list” of hotels before making their final decision. “Comprehensive” decision makers would benefit more from tools such as wish lists or comparison features.

Future Tourism

As the researchers note, their novel typology will help OTAs to stand out from their competitors by ‘understanding travellers’ heterogeneous information needs’ and creating tailor-made approaches to meet them. But OTAs are not the only beneficiaries of this timely research. Travellers will have better and more targeted information at their fingertips, enabling them to pick the perfect hotel with minimal fuss, and hoteliers will have more satisfied customers. As the volume of online bookings continues to grow, and tourism makes an increasingly critical contribution to economic development in the Asia-Pacific region and beyond, this can only spell good news for societies worldwide.
The SHTM’s MicroMasters in International Hospitality Management, the first of its kind in the world and delivered exclusively on the edX online platform, started its spring run in January. Having already attracted more than 63,000 students from over 205 countries, the free Master’s level programme is providing career advancement opportunities to a new batch of students through four innovative courses: Managing Human Resources in the Hospitality and Tourism Industry, Managing Marketing in the Hospitality and Tourism Industry, Hospitality and Tourism Technology and Innovation, and Luxury Management.

Students join the programme because they recognise that ambition is not enough to move ahead. Ms Thalia Pligoropoulou, a Greek project manager working in the US, explained that she took “MicroMasters courses” he developed up-to-date knowledge and expertise and highly interactive courses”. These benefits, she said, would ensure that her career became “a successful endeavour”.

A common theme of change also drives the students. Mr Chiang Yu Hsuan, a business administration graduate working in room-service at the Regent Taipei, remarked that through “interesting and amazing” interactions with classmates and professors, he was able to gain a deep understanding of the hospitality sector. He plans to use the credits gained from the MicroMasters when applying for a position in the SHTM’s on-campus MSc in International Hospitality Management programme.

Other participants appreciate how the courses help them hone existing knowledge. Ms Larisa Kunchenko from Russia commented how the Luxury Management course made her aware of the “numerous tiny details” to be kept in mind when working with clients. By discovering how to be a “brilliant manager”, she was able to build on her MBA background.

At a deeper level, Mr Domenico Gandolfi, a digital manager from Italy, explained that while he came from a country where history is everywhere, through the MicroMasters’ “carefully crafted courses” he developed up-to-date skills and learned new principles and processes that would help him to promote international hospitality at home.

Wherever in the world you are, the SHTM’s MicroMasters in International Hospitality Management will suit you. Individual spring courses are still open for enrolment and the programme’s summer run will commence in May before an autumn run begins in August.

The School’s commitment to advancing the hospitality and tourism industry in mainland China is never more apparent than when graduates share their thoughts. An elite group of graduates had such an opportunity on 23 November at the Sheraton Guangzhou Hotel at a highly informative Admissions Seminar and Forum.

Attracting more than 60 industry attendees eager to learn about the School’s postgraduate programmes, the event featured explanations of what makes an SHTM education compelling and a panel discussion on “Self Improvement in Career Development”.

Delivering her welcome speech, Dr Dan Wang, SHTM Associate Professor, highlighted the School’s rise to the top of global academic rankings, outlined its programmes, and detailed the Master of Science in Hotel and Tourism Management (MSc in HTM), for which she is Programme Leader.

Dr Qu Xiao, SHTM Associate Professor, then spoke about the benefits of the ground-breaking Doctor of Hotel and Tourism Management (D.HTM) programme for which he is the mainland Programme Leader. Highlighting the combination of theoretical focus and practical case studies in the professional D.HTM, along with the broad range of positions graduates fill, Dr Xiao readied the audience for an invigorating panel discussion.

Led by Dr Truman Huang (Huang Xin), D.HTM graduate and Chairman of the Wintour Technology and Education Group, the panel featured D.HTM student Mr Arthur Lau (Lau Siu Fung), General Manager of the Westin Pazhou; MSc in HTM graduates and current D.HTM students Mr Zhou Qiaqiang, Assistant President of Aoyuan Cultural Tourism Group, and Ms Zhang Xiaohua, General Manager of the Guangzhou Evergrande Hotel and the Zengcheng Evergrande Hotel; and MSc in HTM graduates Ms Sissie Gui (Gui Jiuli), Director of Revenue Strategy, South China, Marriott Holdings, and Ms Zoe Chen (Chen Zilin), Cluster Director of Revenue Strategy, South China, Marriott International Inc.

Discussing why students should choose the SHTM, how to balance study, work and life, and how the course helped improve their careers, the speakers were highly enthusiastic. They all agreed that the programmes were very practical and helped them to enhance their networks. Mr Zhou, in particular, said he had been promoted twice since he began his studies.

The event culminated with a Q&A session that allowed the audience to gain even more insights from the speakers. The School looked forward to again highlighting the benefits of its programmes in another informative and thought-provoking seminar to be held in Beijing during March.

Learning From the Best

Ambassadors Overseas

During autumn, the School demonstrated its commitment to providing once-in-a-lifetime learning opportunities by partially funding four students to attend the 46th Annual Overseas Convention of the Hong Kong Association of Travel Agents in Sydney, Australia. On 25 September, BSc in Tourism and Events Management students Ms Lee Yun, Ms Keung Yu Hang, Ms Adelina Wong and Ms Yap Wei Yi arrived in Sydney ready to learn from the foremost practitioners in the field in a city famed for its tourism attractions.

The theme of the convention was “The New Luxury Travel – Road to Business Diversification”. In the Internet age, traditional travel agencies are in decline. One way in which they can regain their significance in an increasingly competitive market is providing luxury travel, which today means more than just first-class flights and five-star hotels. The new paradigm of luxury tourism was explored in depth during one of the highlights of the event, keynote speeches delivered by four distinguished guests from around the globe.

One of the speakers was the School’s own Dr Tony Tse, SHTM Professor of Practice. With more than 30 journal articles, book chapters and conference papers to his name, along with numerous high-level consultancy projects and government appointments, Dr Tse was able to provide a wealth of insights into the motivations for luxury travel, such as uniqueness and novelty.

The SHTM student representatives learned much from all four keynote speakers, and from the chance to network with and gain career advice from major industry players. The plentiful opportunities for sightseeing – from the world-famous Opera House to the spectacular Blue Mountains – also enabled them to explore the city with an international reputation for tourism. Thanking the School for this “truly fruitful and amazing learning experience”, the students said that “the tourism offerings in Sydney inspired us to think about what Hong Kong has to offer to the world, such as École hôtelière de Lausanne and Boston University’s School of Hospitality Administration. Each team is assigned a city and asked to conduct and present a market study based on hotel data for that location. The School’s participating teams thus had the chance to apply their already impressive hotel analysis skills and knowledge in practice.

Local insights are equally crucial. On 25 September, the SHTM hosted a panel discussion featuring Hong Kong entrepreneurs Mr Brian Hui, co-founder of Flow Hotel Booking app; Mr Kevin Tam, founder of Vietnamese restaurant Fuhn Noodles; Mr Kelvin Ho, founder of Flow Hotel Booking app; Mr Kevin Tam, founder of Vietnamese restaurant Fuhn Noodles; Mr Kelvin Ho, founder of Flow Hotel Booking app; Mr Kevin Tam, founder of Vietnamese restaurant Fuhn Noodles; Mr Kelvin Ho, founder of Flow Hotel Booking app; Mr Kevin Tam, founder of Vietnamese restaurant Fuhn Noodles; Mr Kelvin Ho, founder of Flow Hotel Booking app, and Professor for a Day lectures. Informative hotel tours, seminars and Profesor for a Day lectures ensured that the students learned much about the paradigm of Thai hospitality, but just as important were the opportunities to explore this vibrant city and experience its cuisine and tourism for themselves.

Opportunities like this to learn from experience and gain global exposure are at the heart of the School’s world-leading approach to education, nurturing graduates with the expertise, experience and confidence to excel as professionals in the industry.
A key feature of the SHTM’s food and beverage activities is the Food and Wine Academy it offers to students, industry players and a whole range of enthusiasts from the general public. A joint initiative of the School and its world renowned teaching and research hotel, Hotel ICON, the Academy has attracted acclaim from various media outlets for its innovative and highly internationalised approach to imparting food and beverage knowledge and skills.

Recent events hosted by the Academy began with the Voyage through the Medoc Masterclass, held in the Vinoteca Lab, co-organised with Medoc Wine and featuring Ms Wendy Narby, Senior Lecturer at the Bordeaux Wine School. Ms Narby drew on her extensive knowledge and skills to take participants on a sensory journey of the French region’s geology, geography and eight appellations, helping them to compare the different characteristics of the wines.

Attention then turned to mainland China on 12 September when Hotel ICON invited Guest Chef Zeng Jieliang to deliver the Savour the Taste of Shunde Masterclass at the School’s Western Food Lab. Chef Zhen, a native of Shunde – which has been named a Creative City of Gastronomy by UNESCO – highlighted the preparation techniques and careful balance of tastes and textures in what is considered the cradle of Cantonese cooking.

20 September saw the Academy return to French wine at the Vinoteca Lab with the help of co-organiser the One Red Dot Fine Wines Group for the Champagne Moutard Masterclass delivered by Mr Jean-Benoit Hery. Mr Hery, Export Manager of Champagne Moutard, shared his in-depth knowledge of the Champagne region, offering participants the chance to taste Champagne made with forgotten varietals, some of which are rare in the market.

It was then on to the Languedoc region of France on 17 October when Mr Jérôme d’Hurlabord, Export Director Asia and Americas, Château de Pennautier, delivered the Wine from the South of France Masterclass, co-organised by Ponti Trading Limited. Mr d’Hurlabord enlightened participants on the major types of wine in the region and their characteristics.

As always, the Food and Wine Academy, the School’s premier F&B training engagement with the industry and the general public, will reach out into the world of flavours. More information about upcoming events and highlights of previous workshops is available at https://shtm.polyu.edu.hk/shtm/the-food-and-wine-academy/events-and-activities/ and www.facebook.com/FoodAndWineAcademy.
Outstanding Performance Recognised

Undergraduate students with outstanding Grade Point Averages in semesters two and three 2018/19 gathered in the School’s premises on 6 November to receive Academic Achievement Awards for their highly commendable efforts. Also in the spotlight were SHTM Student Ambassadors, who were presented with certificates of recognition for their hard work.

Followed by a Dean’s Reception in the School’s Foyer, the event attracted SHTM staff, postgraduate students and proud family members.

The School congratulates the following students for their commitment to academic excellence.

For more than 25 years, the SHTM Alumni Association has tirelessly sought to forge links between the School, its alumni and the community for the benefit of all. This mission – very much in line with the first of the Association’s core values, synergy – has been amply demonstrated in recent months, with carefully organised activities providing opportunities for Association members to learn more about the industry and each other.

Synergy was certainly the theme when the Association renewed its cooperation with the Hong Kong Trade Development Council (HKTDC) to allow members to attend the Hong Kong Food Expo free of charge on 17 August. Participants spent part of a Saturday morning on an exclusive Buyer Guided Tour of the event at the Hong Kong Convention and Exhibition Centre, being led to highlighted zones before they had the chance to take in all stalls.

Featuring food retailers, wholesalers, distributors, buying offices and more, the Expo appealed not only to gourmets among the participating members, but also to those looking for business opportunities. For the latter, the HKTDC offered a complimentary Business Matching Service along with free invitations to official functions such as the cocktail reception and seminars.

Association members returned to the Convention and Exhibition Centre on 9 November for the Hong Kong International Wine and Spirits Fair, when they again enjoyed free admission and a special member visit programme organised by the HKTDC. Their Saturday afternoon kicked off with a tour of the major wine pavilions among the truly astonishing array of 759 stalls.

Afterwards, members had the opportunity to refresh their oenological knowledge by sampling a huge range of wines from every part of the word. Beer, whisky and even olive oil were also in plentiful supply for those with different tastes, as were the types of food suitable for pairing with many different beverages. A great deal was learned, and all members in attendance enjoyed themselves thoroughly.

The SHTM Alumni Association is truly going from strength to strength. For the chance to be part of this exciting journey, simply download the registration form or contact Rachel Wu. For details, visit https://shtm.polyu.edu.hk/industry-alumni/shtm-alumni-association/registration/.
